

"Forms of religion are of no value unless they produce the fruits of religion. Rites and ordinances are important just to the degree that they express spiritual devotion...It is first of all a matter of the heart and then it becomes a matter of behavior and attitude."

Clifton J. Allen

"When I read about rooms in Noah's ark....Those who lived in one room did not stand or sit with those who lived in another, but they were on the same ark. So I have sometimes thought, there are our Wesleyan friends, some of them love the Lord; I have no doubt they are in the ark, though they do not occupy the same apartment as we do. There are our Baptist friends, who love the Lord; we welcome them in our room. Then there are our Independent friends, those also love the Lord; they are in another room. And our Presbyterian and Episcopalian brethren—in all these various sections are some who are called of God and brought into the ark, though they are in different rooms. But, beloved, they are all in one ark.

Charles Spurgeon
